Four lessons from a month of building and running a marketing system that runs on its own.

Swipe for the breakdown →

01

Systems start with rules, not tools. Every automation that worked began as a short document of what is allowed and what is not.

02

A schedule you can trust beats brilliant content. One post that shows up on time every day beats the best post that arrives late.

03

Measure what leads to sales.

Followers and views are good for morale. Leads, closings and cost per closing are good for decisions.

04

AI speeds up the work, but judgement stays human. Every fact, price and promise gets checked before it goes out.

“

Followers are good for morale. Leads, closings and cost per closing are good for decisions.

Which of these matters most for your business right now?

Reply, Track, Follow Up

Ebook + tracker + templates · link in the first comment